

Master of Science Degree in Development Finance

Overview

The Master of Science Degree in Development Finance is designed to develop people and institutions that can help provide optimum financial outcomes that enhance the design and implementation of reforms and capacity-building programs adapted by development financial institutions, governments, the private sector, NGO and the wider emerging markets.

While Development Finance is typically known for its use by people working in development finance and other related institutions, it is also widely used by people in other banking and financial services institutions. It provides the expertise to start initial investments that act as the right catalyst, and demonstrate that enterprises can thrive in economically challenging markets. It is used to ensure that funds channeled through development projects provide sustainable outcomes that can sustain the development agendas of developing countries.

Why this Degree?

As a professional discipline, Development Finance is widely practiced today by all central governments; major development financial institutions including the World Bank, the IMF, the UN; as well as public and private sector organizations, international foundations and NGOs.

However there is a shortage of Development Finance experts in Africa, where the expertise is needed most. It's for this reason the KCA University School of Graduate Studies (SGS), has partnered with Africa Growth Institute (AGI), to create the Master of Science Degree in Development Finance.

The Msc (Development Finance) programme aims to ensure that Africa produces enough development finance experts to meet the growing needs of the growing continent.
